Excerpt: . . . 9 advisory support teams in support of the training that will allow Iraqi and Afghan forces to assume a greater role in securing their own countries. To assist in this transformation of the Reserve components, the Department initiated a Continuum of Service paradigm aimed to provide more flexibility in creating needed capabilities and to ensure seamless and cost-effective management of military forces. It prescribes both organizational and systemic change in order to more effectively manage individuals throughout their military career, while meeting the full spectrum of military requirements in peacetime and wartime with greater efficiency and economy of resources. The continuum of service enhances the spirit of volunteerism by providing more ways in which military service can be performed to support DOD missions. The continuum provides more extensive opportunities for the part-time force to...
