Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.2in.Excerpt from The Year of Our Lord, 1904: A Survey of the WorldMr. Roosevelt is at heart a social reformer, and in the days of his youth belonged to a coterie of social dreamers that might almost be regarded as Utopian in their schemes. He has succeeded in making the most remarkable personal, ethical, and social impression upon the people that ever was achieved by any President. And it was time. The love of wealth, the corrupt forms and principles of a decaying English aristocracy, the increasing love of pleasure as a chief end of life among our American youth, and certain conspicuous American immoralities, were rushing our country on toward social ruin. The President had prepared the people for this remarkable expression of his views by already declaring that he was for peace and not for war; but in his message, war has comparatively the most inconspicuous place of all. The navy and army are relegated to the end of the document and together constitute but one-eighteenth of the message, and the Philippines with their issues are as comparatively small. The meeting of the International Peace Conference in Boston early in October, the Presidents promise to try to call another Peace Conference at The Hague, his announcement that the administration is negotiating arbitration treaties with all the Powers that will enter into such negotiations, and Secretary Hays address at the opening of the Boston Conference, claiming that when The Hague Conference lay apparently wrecked, at the beginning of its career, it was the American government which gave it the breath of life; and that we have set an example to the world during the past two years in the matter of...
