The external length of the chapel is 82 ft, the width 27, the largest ecclesiastical structure, therefore, in Kintyre, and probably also in the whole of Argyle, if the cathedral at Iona alone be excepted. The details though plain, as usual, are of very good character, and seem to be of advanced FirstPointed date. All the windows have the scoinson-arch, and with the doorways are formed of a bright red sandstone, which has rather a pleasing effect, but contrasts oddly with the dark slaty material of the general building. The east window is of two lights Bimply divided by a monial: those in the side walls are narrow lancets; and of same kind is one in the middle of the west end of smaller size, topped by a square aperture in the gable, which is probably quite modern. Out of Kintyre, the road passes into Knapdale by the narrow isthmus of Tarbert, and from the village the traveller may continue his course either straight forward to Ardrishaig, which is a good starting-point for the central parts of the district; or by turning round to the left, find his way more immediately into the interior by the finely diversified route along the side of Loch Tarbert....
