Excerpt from Completion of Coleridge s Christabel: And Other Poems With music strong and saintly song To wander through the forest bare Lest aught unholy loiter there. Sir Leoline dismissed his forebodings with a jest, and again kissed the forehead of fair Geraldine. The latter looked at Christabel furtively and askance and with such intensity of malice that the face of the gentle maiden, in her weakness to resist the evil influence of the beautiful witch, unconsciously took on the selfsame expression. Her father beheld the look, and, wrongly ascribing it to jealousy, felt that his old age and hospitality had been dishonored by his only child. Still more his heart was cleft with rage and pain when Christabel fell at his feet, and, unable to tell the real meaning of her action, entreated him by her mother s soul to send the woman away. After a few moments of utter confusion and silent rage he ordered Bracy from the room. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
