Excerpt: . . . 11 building at 232 posts lacked sufficient security because it did not meet one or more 2 of States five key standards. These standards are a 100-foot setback between office facilities and public streets or other uncontrolled areas, the presence of perimeter walls and or fencing, anti-ram barriers, blast-resistant construction techniques and materials, and controlled access at the perimeter to the compound. Moreover, at 81 posts, the primary building did not meet any of these standards. Only 12 posts have a primary building that meets all 5 standards. As a result, thousands of U. S. gov-ernment and foreign national employees may be at risk. Our visits to four posts last month provide numerous examples of serious physical security shortcomings. None of the primary office buildings at the four posts meets setback standards, and three posts have annex buildings without any setback. At one post, an annex building has little or no setback on four sides, and there is a public gas station on one side that could potentially exacerbate the blast force from a bomb. In addition, U. S. personnel at two posts occupy leased space in office buildings constructed with extensive glass walls, which post officials told us could shatter, seriously injuring or killing many occupants in the event of a large blast. Security officials at the posts we visited are concerned that many of the buildings we observed are vulnerable to terrorist at-tacks. Many of the primary office...
