GRIN Verlag. Paperback. Condition: New. 64 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.8in. x 0.1in. Seminar paper from the year 2009 in the subject Politics - International Politics - Region: Russia, grade: 1.0, European University Viadrina Frankfurt (Oder), course: Direct Democracy: Theory and Practice. , language: English, comment: Theoretical arguments and empirical evidence regarding direct democracy in Transition Countries is not always compatible, as many think (FREY 2003: 1f). While direct democracy usually raise trust and political interest by the society, in some undemocratic countries it cannot produce this outcome. In Belarus, a country with a very weak national identity, high dependency on Russia and sanctions by the European Union, institutions of direct democracy serve exclusively strengthening the ruling power of the dictator and legitimizing his decisions. What are reasons for this situation , abstract: In order to proof democratic developments in Belarus the following study will be divided into five different sections. The opening section positions Belarus within contemporary debate about the concept of the Direct Democracy, with a special focus on the relevance and functions of the institution of referendum and plebiscite. Next, the paper reviews the Belarusian referenda since president Lukashenko came to power. First, legal bases for this...
