He mourn d his orphan state-- his doubtful birth, Still ignorant of where he first drew breath. He sighs despair, and yet requests to hope; In which fond hope indulging since we met, Perhaps to Zebulon he told his tale. I have no doubt this was the very cause, Of his displeasure and of Fervent s grief. He yesternight was vex d at the advice, Fraternal love impell d me to attempt; And threaten d wrath on Blandly and my friend. I heard him vow his sister should not wed, An outcast orphan; povertie s lean child j Object of hate, derision and contempt. My dear, dear brother; she replied, from yo-, Twould be ingratitude to hide a thought: My sighs are but for him; my heart now beats, Still sadly doubting his returning health. Our friendly intimacy was approb d By our...
