BookBaby, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Two families lived in different countries with different social and political cultures. Both lived through hard times and happy times. Their experiences prepared them to meet at a later time in the United States. Erik Neumann left home at fourteen years of age and finished his apprenticeship as a baker, but couldn't find a job. So he signed up for a twelve year stint in the German Army. While stationed in Dresden, he met Helga Schmidt, a prankish, sociable and cunning young lady who worked for an officer's family. He married her the year Hitler came to power. They had two children, Rosina and Rolf. Erik left the service in 1936 and was called back in 1939 when WWII started, leaving Helga to run the household. After the war, in 1945, he was captured as a prisoner of war by the Czechs and kept for a year and a half. Helga had to provide for the family. She worked small jobs, stole food, and remained strong for her children. While Erik was in Czechoslovakia, she had to evacuate with the children for two weeks because the Russian soldiers were marching through their town. When Erik returned home, he was very ill and couldn't work for two years. While Helga worked, he looked after Rosina and Rolf. He refused to join the Communist Party and was forbidden to work for the government. He had to settle for menial jobs. After getting his education in textiles, Rolf, at seventeen, escaped to West Berlin. He got a job in the west and waited for his family to join him. As soon as his father was reinstated to his trained profession as a tax agent, Rolf went to the United...
