Excerpt from Voigtla?nder and I in Pursuit of Shadow Catching: A Story of Fifty-Two Years Companionship With a Camera Little by little Dame Nature gave, often grudgingly, of her secrets, so that by and by out of the dim Shadows there came substance and reality. N O longer need we wander with tear-dimmed eyes through the empty halls of memory, vainly seeking by their echoes some semblance to the faces of those we have loved and lost, for now upon the printed page their counterparts smile and smile again as of yore. Painted canvas may give us the bloom of youth, may scatter over the head of age winter's hoary frost, but for truth of feature wherein beams anew the very soul of the Sitter, we lovingly turn to those masterpieces painted by the subtle fingers of the god of day.
