When slaughtering guns are heard no more, Along the Hudson's tranquil shore, Here would we live, and here enjoy Those sweet pursuits, that wars destroy. My brother, dear as life to me, Has struck the blow for Liberty Ah! Shouldst thou then to battle go, And show thyself his mortal foe, Discord between you will arise, And break true friendship's dearest ties; These vows will end which we have plighted, And all our hopes will then be blighted. Jones. Come, talk not thus, dry up those tears, Dispel those sad foreboding fears I am true thy brother, sad to say, Hath joined the rebels in the fray But for thy sake Where'er I go, I never shall show myself his foe; Yet to do justice to our King, (as yet inactive I have been,) I must away, and with them there Be willing in the strife to share. And surely, thou wilt not disdain To hear...
