These two classes united in calling upon the Government to make some provision for the better education of persons in the middle ranks of life, by the foundation of scholarships, and the establishment of Colleges or institutions where instruction in the higher branches of learning could be offered at a moderate cost, and of a superior quality. The object which the Bill was expressly devised to achieve, was that which he had just described. But he would beg to ask the noble Earl who had just sat down, whether he thought the measure would prove of any benefit whatever to Ireland, if it were to be confined exclusively to persons of one form of religious belief? Would any person professing other religious belief, apply for instruction or admission to the Colleges which should be instituted under the Bill, if they found that their form of faith was discountenanced at those Colleges? The Bill, as originally framed, made no provision whatever for religious instruction in the Collegiate Establishments which were to be formed under it. But, in consequence of what had occurred during its progress in another place, an alteration had been agreed to, and provision made in it for halls and lecture rooms, where theological lectures might be given to those students who were disposed to attend to such a course of instruction. There...
