

Mission-Based Advisory: A Professional Development Manual (Third Edition)

By Roger Dillow

Independent School Management. Paperback. Condition: New. 220 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 8.0in. x 0.5in. This manual provides a comprehensive, how-to perspective on the professional development of advisors and the strengthening of advisory programs in private-independent schools. While this book is intended for private school educators, we also hope that advisory program leaders in charter, magnet, and other public schools will find benefit in these pages as well. We have learned that readers of this book, regardless of type of school, are typically seeking a more robust and meaningful advisory program, one that is much more than simply homeroom and one that is built on the connection between advisor professional development and student well-being. A comprehensive guide to creating and strengthening advisory the why, the how, the keys to success, the pitfalls to avoid, and the ways advisory can enrich the culture of the school. -- Robert Evans, Executive Director, The Human Relations Service A strong advising program is crucial in keeping a schools mission alive and vibrant in the daily life of the school. Unfortunately, most schools provide little, if any, professional development for faculty to support this important role, creating an inconsistent experience for its students. Whether a school is looking...
