Excerpt from History of the Modern Styles of Architecture, Vol. 2 of 2 The teaching, however, of Classical literature in our schools. And the example of the Continent, at last took effect. And when once an architect presented himself calurble of producing designs in the new style, and exhibiting specimens in all their fashionable proportions, it became the rage with us, as it was on the Continent: and our ancestors out-heroded Herod in the Strict classicality of their useless porticoes and the purity with which they used the Orders. Wholly irrespective either of climate or situation all this being only too sure a proof how little true feeling they at that time had for Art. And how completely they had lost the knowledge of the first principles that ought to guide an architect in the preparat ion of his designs. In England, as in all other countries of modern Europe. The arts followed in the same track as literature, only that here they lagged more behind. And Classical forms and feelings are found in all our literary prrxhrctions long before their influence was...
