Angel of Lonesome Hill: A Story of a President by Frederick Landis. The angel of this short story is a mother who for thirty-five years had prayed for the pardon of an unjustly accused and imprisoned son. A dream of hers sends her aged husband to the President to ask a pardon that he had once before refused. The interview reveals the tender sympathy that lies so close to the rugged courage in the heart of the greatest American of to-day. Thus the sketch besides having unusual story interest embodies one of the highest tributes ever paid to Mr. Roosevelt. * * * * * The Angel of Lonesome Hill is another of Mr. Landis brief but effective stories. It is of ordinary magazine length and can be read at a sitting, but it makes its appeal none the less forcibly. It is one of the few instances in American fiction in which a living ex-President has figured. -The American Review of Reviews, Vol. 41.
