None of the other workmen could direct the engine to be stopped. Mullin alone had that power. His direction in reference thereto, or failure to direct, was an act of superintendence. At least, the jury was authorized to so And. --Guilmartin v. Solcay Process Co., 189 N. Y. Rep. 480. 2. In a somewhat similar case the Court of Appeals set aside a verdict which had been affirmed by the First Appellate Department. An employee was caught in some shafting and killed. It appeared that, under the orders of one Brady, a workman who was alleged to be and who may be assumed to have been the superintendent of the room in which he was working, the decedent was engaged with another workman in replacing a belt upon a pulley; that they were assisted in this work by said superintendent and that, while decedent was endeavoring by hand to slip the belt upon the pulley which was then disconnected from the power shaft and was not moving, the superintendent, suddenly and without warning, and probably for the purpose of assisting in rolling the belt on pulley,...
