Excerpt: .but in the train when going from Jaffa to Jerusalem. Sitting opposite to us was an elderly woman with silver-streaked hair and beautiful features, and looking altogether charming in her long striped gown, red coloured and silk embroidered short jacket, while the high head-gear was concealed by a white shawl. We made a sign that we should like to see her bonnet. Immediately she threw back her veil, revealing a red high hat elaborately adorned with gold and silver coins, that were fastened to it securely, while several more of the coins were linked together and falling like a chain under the chin and down the neck. These coins were current money, and were the old lady s fortune, and probably had been her dowry. This picturesque, though to us unsafe, custom of making the hat the bank, is a very ancient one. Other women,...
