FBC LTD, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Brown Alumni Monthly, Vol. 11: June, 1910 to May, 1911 Could not the immense mass of water of Noah's flood have come from a source that was exhausted in producing the flood? In the formation of the earth, when in a fused condition, the more volatile elements must have been projected great distances from its centre. As the central mass condensed, it is conceivable that belts of lighter matter may have been left in space, like the rings of Saturn, at a distant point of equilibrium, but at a nearness where that equilibrium would ultimately be destroyed and this matter fall to the earth. Such belts would first be in the plane of the equator; and, if ever broken up, would do one of two things; either accumulate around a nucleus and form a moon in its orbit; or scatter over the dome of earth in moving towards the poles, where tangential force diminishes and gravity increases, and ultimately precipitate upon the earth.
