Earthscan, London, 1996. Paperback. Condition: New. Reprint. The single most important influence on the world's forests - temperate, boreal and tropical - is the timber trade. This book analyzes the environmental effects the trade is having, and proposes policies to limit or reverse the damage. It looks not only at the social and environmental consequences for the forests themselves, but also at the effects of the ways in which timber is farmed and the effects of the timber processing industries. Ideally, the timber trade and environmentalists could be working towards a common goal, and this book makes a vital case relevant to both parties. Size: 8vo - over 7¾" - 9¾" tall.
