Slaves to their superstition wild, Th Arreoy s will destroy my child! With its first breath will seize their prize, Unfather d, unreveng d it dies! All that I could make out of this strange ceremony was, that the Arreoy s are highly respected, and that the society is chiefly composed of men distinguished by their valor, or some other merit, and that great trust and confidence is reposed in them; I learnt from Tinah, in talking about his children, that his first-born child was killed as soon as it came into the world, he being then an Arreoy; but before his second child was born, he quitted the society. Such of the natives as-I conversed with about the institution of so extraordinary a society as the Arreoy, 2 asserted that it was necessary, to prevent an over population. Worrow,...
