Excerpt from Significance of Liberia: An Address Delivered in the Senate, 20th May, 1906 I am free to say that as Africans in the land of our fathers, hence our own land, with the advantages gained in slavery, we have special duties and glorious privileges. It is not our part to be looking backward across the ocean, but forward into the great continent, our ancestral home. Our brethren in foreign lands are striving by all possible unnatural means to become White, While we are looking eastward and are determined to remain natural. Let us not take for granted what we have heard with our ears, and our masters have told us but let us search for ourselves, as the Bereans did, and see whether these things are so; search both in the Book Of Revelations and in the vast and fruitful book of nature around us. It is our part to be learning new things which are not recorded in books, and which without us the world cannot learn; therefore, our thinking friends abroad think it such a pity that Liberians, as Africans, in an independent State in Africa, should be content to follow and imitate them on all lines, religious, social and industrial. It is in our power, they think (and rightly too), to discover fresh interests for mankind new avenues, not only Of material, but Of religious, social and intellectual progress. This is too true. In the first place we should make new friends, and renew forgotten acquaintances with our aboriginal friends. We should study their laws and customs, and convey the meaning of them to the outside world. This is what our best friends expect Of us. This is what...
