By Arthur Shadwell

Forgotten Books, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Drink in 1914-1922: A Lesson in Control The war affected the production and consumption of alcoholic liquors in every country by the withdrawal of materials for manufacture in order to make good the deficiency of food, by interference with transport, and by increase of prices. These changes caused a general, though unequal, diminution of production and consumption. The civilian population was further affected in belligerent countries by the withdrawal of varying quantities from ordinary consumption for the use of the armies. But in addition to these general effects of the war, specific measures of interference were enacted by Govern ment in certain countries. In France the manufacture and sale of absinthe were prohibited, and Spirits in general were excluded from the war zone, with an exception in favour of home-distillation from fruits; in Russia the manufacture of vodka, which was a Government monopoly, was stopped in Sweden the serving of spirits for consumption on the premises was allowed only with meals above a certain price, and the sale for off consumption was rationed; in Great Britain a system Of control was...
