Excerpt: . . . seem essential components of the circle which the transfigured Lord has drawn round Him, and it is by contrast with these circumscribed forms that the floating figure gains the full effect of freedom and emancipation. If Raphael had bequeathed nothing to the world but this group, it would be a complete monument of art as he conceived it. 1 1 The feeling for proportion and arrangement was soon completely dulled in the Bolognese Academicians, who essayed to continue the traditions of the classical period. Christ, haranguing the disciples from the clouds, squeezed in between the sprawling seated figures of Moses and Elijah, and the herculean disciples, beneath, vulgarly exaggerated in gesture and attitude--this is Ludovico Carraccis picture in the Bologna Gallery. (See illustration). But he did not wish to end there. He wanted a strong contrast, and this he found in the episode of the demoniac boy. It is the logical development of those principles of composition which he had adopted in the Heliodorus Stanza. Above, peace, solemnity and celestial rapture; beneath, noisy crowds and earthly lamentation. The Apostles stand there, closely packed together. There are confused groups and strident outlines. The chief motive is a diagonal path, over which the crowd has spread. The figures in the lower part of the picture are on a larger scale than those in the upper, but there is no danger of their outweighing the Transfiguration scene. The clear geometrical disposition triumphs over all the tumult of...
