Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Original Contributions Concerning the Glandular Structures Appertaining to the Human Eye and Its Appendages: With 71 Original Illustrations The studies and investigations which are the subject of this paper are the outcome of a desire to have as clear as possible an understanding of the glandular structures appertaining to the human eye and its appendages from personal knowledge. It took a number of years to accumulate the very numerous specimens, the careful study of which furnished the basis for the descriptions here given. While part of the many eyelids which I have examined were obtained from suitable cases in my own practice, a large number came from the dissecting rooms of the Beaumont Hospital Medical College of this city through the kindness of Dr. R. W. Baker, the demonstrator of anatomy in this institution. Of necessity a great part of this anatomical material was of a pathological character, and it has, therefore, served for other studies as well.
