During the dry season, as the river was unusually low, gaugings were made by boat. According to past records the elevation of the river at Gamboa has never been as low as it was during the dry season of 1911, although the discharge at this point has been less on many occasions. It is believed that this unusual condition is due to changes in the river bed caused by gravel excavation work of the Panama Railroad just above the fluvigraph. The gaugings at this station were made by a hydrographer from the central office, and river-height records have been continued throughout the year. A series of measurements was made in the gravel bar near the gauging station to obtain the slope of the ground water from which to estimate the amount of water flowing through the gravel in the bed of the stream. This experiment, although rough, indicated that the quantity thus passing was extremely small in comparison with the surface flow of the river. Although abandoned as a regular gauging station, measurements of the cross section at Bohio have been taken from time to time in order that gaugings could be made if necessary in time of flood or discharge estimates could be estimated from the gauge heights. Constant records of the river heights also have been kept. At Gatun the entire run-off from the Chagres basin has passed through the spillway since April, 1910, and gaugings have been...
