Excerpt from North Carolina Public School Bulletin, Vol. 20: September, 1955 Not only are children turning toward school this month; all over North Carolina adults too are giving considerable thought to what is happening over at the school. Public interest in public education is in evidence everywhere, and this concern gives ultimate promise of better schools. Many organizations, associations, councils, and study groups are contributing to this surging tide of interest. The discussions arising out of the topics considered in the White House Conferences on Education are likewise kindling interest in education. These topics are provoking inquiry and promoting a sense of mutual responsibility on the part of teacher and lay groups for better schools.
