Mr. Abe found this same pest on a tree nearly a hundred years old, with no possible chance of its having come in contact with foreign or native fruit trees that were infested. He said, The reason we did not know this insect until to-day is because it is so small, and so hard to see. 1 Vol. Ill, No. u, Dec. 15, 1899, p. 452. On June 12, 1900, I called upon Professor M. Miyoshi, at Koishikawa Botanical Garden, Imperial University, Tokyo. He said that last winter Professor Treub, Director of the Botanical Garden, Buitenzorg, Java, sent a letter (dated Jan. 15) to him asking whether the San Jose scale insect existed in Japan, and if it did, whether it was native to Japan. Professor Miyoshi, knowing nothing about the scale, wrote to Professor Sasaki, Professor Matsumura, and Mr....
