Paperback. Condition: New. 288 pages. A novel exploring a womans escape from an abusive relationship to find herself. A lot of people get pushed around and take it its safer than confrontation. But Teale was finding too much was being taken away from her her once seemingly secure life was a sham and it was all beginning to cost her dearly something had to be done but the answers were hidden in a veil of lies She began searching, in hidden places, for someone shed lost, a long time ago Susan Crossman is a breakthrough writer who probes deep into the psyche of her readers, taking them on a journey of self discovery that is both intensely personal and revealing - Michael B Davie, author, The Late Man The murder of women by their intimate partners occurs on a daily basis in North America. And every day, you can also find thousands of women and their children living in emergency shelters and safe houses to escape domestic violence As someone who has never been in an abusive relationship, I was intrigued by the dynamic of abuse. What would make a woman choose to involve herself with a man who appears to despise her I began to ask such questions while working for a womens shelter where I met some amazing women who shared their stories with me This has been a sad but enlightening journey. But out of all of those fascinating and heart-breaking pieces of tragedy I was able to weave together the purely fictional story of Teales escape from abuse to freedom It is my hope that this fictional story leads to a deeper understanding of a very real problem that causes untold pain to women every day. - Susan CrossmanAbout the Author: Susan Crossman is a freelance...
