Excerpt from Cops Program: Hearing Before the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, One Hundred Fourth Congress, First Session, December 7, 1995 Mr. Mccollum. If I could I d like to call this Subcommittee on Crime hearing to order this morning. We have a very important topic to discuss. Some of our members are in a conference on the Republican side on a caucus on the Democratic side. We even called the meetings of our groups different names. I can t under stand that tradition totally, but that s the way it is. But we do have a number of us present and we want to thank the witnesses for coming. Today we examine the community policing initiative, better known as the cops [community Oriented Policing Services] pro gram which was established in last year s controversial crime bill. The ostensible purpose of the cops program is to put more police on the streets. This was of course one of President Clinton s major campai promises. All accounts the President appears to be well on is way toward, keeping this promise. The Justice Department s cops Office, as we will hear today, claims to have added approximately police to the streets though grants it has issued over the past year. The Department s dedica tion to getting this job done quickly serves as a model of what. An agency is capable of doing when it is enthusiastic about its mission.
