Excerpt from The Chemical Changes Taking Place in the Fat of Broilers During Cold Storage: A Thesis Lowe (1939) studied the effect of the length of time between killing and drawing on the keeping quality, tenderness, and palatability of the birds. She found that over-night cooling before drawing added to the tenderness and palatability. Yet these properties were not affected by a longer time a cooling. Over a long period of storage, the total jaiciness and flavor decreased. The problem of desiccation is also very important. Cook (1959) made studies of the causes and prevention of surface desiccation. It was found that low temperatures of about -15 C. And high humidity of 95 to 100 percent would maintain the proper moisture content of the birds. Or Midities caused a decrease in the moisture and an increase in the freezer burn. Various liners and wrappers were tried for the preservation (a the moisture content. Sealing the Joints in the paper liners commonly used in commercial poultry boxes was beneficial, regardless of the moisture permeability of the paper used. The better liners were parchment, heavy wax, and alum foil. Sealed moisture resistant liners were found to be effective.
