Excerpt from Centennial Discourse, Delivered September 9, 1850, Before the First Church and Society in Athol: At the Celebration of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Organization of Said Church The settlement was commenced here by the five pioneer spirits under discouraging circumstances. They were alone with their families in an entire wilderness, which, on account of the abundance of fish and wild game that this locality afforded, was a familiar haunt for the Indians. Of necessity the settlers were destitute of most of the usual comforts of life and the common implements of husbandry, obliged to journey on foot more than thirty miles through the pathless woods for all the means of sustenance which the gloomy wild of the forest did not afford. But they were men of resolute spirits, and were joined with helpmeets resolute as themselves, able and willing to share their trials. The prospect of new and early parental responsibilities was before them, but did not deter them from their enterprise. They had drawn their house-lots here, and here they were resolved to fix their habitations and rear...
