Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Journal of Laboratory and Clinical Medicine, 1921, Vol. 6 N a series Of experiments performed at the Hygienic Laboratory in s- vashing ton in the year 1918 it was shown by Jackson and Smith¹ that one of the most important and outstanding-features of the acute symptoms of poisoning fol lowing the intravenous injection of arsphenamine solutions in dogs consists in the production of a very marked and prolonged rise in the pulmonary blood pres sure. This within itself would perhaps be sufficient to account for a part, if not for all, Of the milder toxic symptoms which are occasionally produced clinically by the injection of arsphenamine. But aside from the pulmonary vascular changes, there remained the possibility that the dyspnea and marked respiratory disturbances which are frequently present during nitritoid crises of severe, acute arsphenamine intoxication might be due to, or associated with, a marked bronchial constriction. This point was not investigated by Jackson and Smith although at that time the presence of some such factor as this was strongly sus pected, particularlv on account of the analogy in action on the bronchioles which is often exhibited among metallic salts. In the present work we have carried out some preliminary experiments in order to determine whether or not any true bronchial asthmatic action is produced by injections of arsphenamine.
