Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Information Systems Decision Investment decisions about information systems and computing hardware are usually made on the basis of faith. Most often, the competitive necessity to produce efficiently (whether perceived or real) forces the decision. Managers generally address the problem by simply investing and hoping. But by projecting and carefully considering the expected effects of the decision they could sharply reduce the faith component of this investment. Almost all firms fighting to stay competitive in today s markets have to make information systems (I/S) investment decisions. At the same time, they must pay more attention to productivity than they did a decade ago. So when managers make these decisions, they seek to maximize expected pay-offs, including productivity improvements that result from I/S installations. But in order to compare I/S costs with expected benefits, managers will have to use benchmark productivity measurements by which they can later gauge the value of an I/S investment.
