Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The North American Review, Vol. 129 It was to be expected that the inventions of Edison and Gray would excite universal interest. The exhibit of the former consisted of the phonograph, quadruplex electric pen, speaking telephone, musical telephone, pressure relay, and electro-motograph. The latter sent apparatus for transmitting musical and other sounds by tele graph, including the multiple acoustic telegraph, way duplex tele graph, the musical telephone, and the speaking telephone. From Edison s stand, telephonic communication was established with Ver sailles, distant fifteen miles from Paris, and Visitors were freely al lowed to test the instrument, which they did with evident wonder and delight. The offices of the commissioner-general were connected with the Agricultural Building, and with all parts of the United States section, by telephonic wires and instruments furnished from the ex hibit of Gray. Since the Exposition a company has been formed in Paris for the introduction into France, and throughout the Continent, of the various inventions of Edison and Gray. There is an increasing de mand from all parts of Europe for the speaking telephones, of which Sixty thousand are already in use in the United States.
