Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Presented to the Schools of Philadelphia Philadelphia, the World s Greatest Workshop, has no line of endeavor in which she can exhibit more pride than that of the Rug and Carpet industry. It may be said to be one of her ancient industries, dating back to shortly after the Revolution in a real manufacturing way, although the goodman or the housewife among the colonists, wove the carpet which adorned the floors of the principal rooms of the home. The real wealthy could afford an imported carpet. Rag and Ingrain carpets were the first woven, the latter, although of Scotch origin, being known as Kidderminster from the place in which they were originally made in 1735 in England. William Peter Sprague in 1791, in his shop on North Second Street, Philadelphia, was the first to manufacture these goods in America, on a considerable scale. The most important manufacturer of the early period was Isaac Macauley, who operated continuously from 1810 to 1837. He was also credited with having made the first Brussels carpet in America. Since that time there have been many illustrious carpet manufacturers in Philadelphia and the names of Bromley; McCallum; Ivins, Dietz Magee; Hogg Metzger; Dobson; Dornan; Horner; Kitchenman Neall; Gay and Crow, revive old memories and some of these factories are still active after many years of successful operation. The art having been brought from the Mother Country has remained to this day a distinctive craft, owned and operated by those of English, Irish and Scotch ancestry or birth, and as if by clannish common consent, nearly all the manufacturers located their establishments in the Kensington district. For three-quarters of a century...
