Excerpt from Brimstone Ballads: And Other Verse Tired of his somewhat protracted passivity, He determined to work, for a change But just as a boulder bounds down a declivity He, novice-like, bustled with heedless activity And evidenced all a beginner s proclivity For experiments foolish and strange. God had been living in total obscurity, So the first thing he made was the light For, though in the dark he could see through futurity He wanted a light to construct with security, And give to his figures such outlines of purity As would meet with approval at sight.
