Excerpt from Preliminary Report on the Soils and Agricultural Conditions of North Central Wisconsin, 1903 The present very general and brief account of the soils and agricultural conditions of North Central Wisconsin, is presented in answer to numerous requests for information concerning the soils of the northern part of the state. It is the outcome of a geological study of the district,<sup>1</sup> rather than a survey of the soils alone by a specialist trained in agricultural science. It is mainly based on a study of the surface formations of the district, which occur in considerable variety and include glacial drift formations of different ages, alluvial formations along the large streams and adjacent to extinct glaciers, and residual formations due to the weathering in place of the crystalline rocks and the sandstone of the district. Each of the surface formations has a characteristic soil and these are described with respect to area, general character and origin, surface features, groundwater, the forest growth developed upon them in the past, and the crops now grown upon them so far as they have been opened to agriculture.
