Excerpt: . . . The Municipal Efficiency Bureau I. What It Is: An institution designed to introduce into public administration the most economical methods of private business, to prevent waste and to provide an effective agency of citizens inquiry--to ascertain exactly how the public business is being transacted, to bring this information to the people in digestible form, and on the basis of exact knowledge to assist city administration in increasing efficiency. The work and methods of these bureaus are more specifically discussed below. II. Where Located: Active bureaus are now in operation in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Milwaukee and Memphis. III. Success Of The Work: These bureaus have been in operation only a very short time, but they have amply justified their existence. Owing to the cumbersome form of American government, with its decentralized power and its intricate system of checks and balances, municipal administration has fallen into such a condition that a corps of experts directing themselves not to finding fault but to constructive proposals for betterment, are enabled in a very short time to suggest methods capable of saving the city large sums of money. The New York Bureau of Municipal Research is credited with having saved the city several millions of dollars, besides having inaugurated budgetary and other educational campaigns whose results in awakening and enlightening public opinion are as valuable as they are difficult to measure. The following represent some of the more important results of the New York Bureaus work: Reorganization...
