Excerpt from Economic Moralism: An Essay in Constructive Economics The President of the French Chamber of Deputies declared on December 22, 1914, that the great war being waged defensively by. France and her Allies against the Teutonic Powers was in support of the principle that right is might. This principle, as the antithesis of the Teutonic one that might is right, is admirable. But to make it ethically effective the nations that emblazon it on their banners will have to devote much consideration to its meaning. The war finished, ethical inquiry will receive such an impetus as it has perhaps never had in the world's history. There will be ardent and keen investigation into the laws of right conduct in every department of life - right conduct between nations, right conduct between races, sects, and political parties living under the same government, and, above all, because lying at the root of all right living, right conduct in economic affairs - that is, in the production and division of wealth. These are the most momentous problems pressing upon the...

Reviews

This book is definitely not straightforward to get started on studying but extremely exciting to read. It is really simplistic but shocks in the 50 percent of the ebook. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.
