Excerpt from Jack Harkaway s Adventures in America and Cuba, Being a Continuation of Adventures Around the World IT was after a kind of dreamy stupor had worn off, that our hero at length opened his eyes. He felt stronger, and able to remember all that had occurred, but a raging thirst devoured him. He would have given the world, if he had had it, for the smallest drink of water. The first object on which his eye rested was the hap less negro, lying on the grass in a pool of crimson gore.
