Excerpt: .application of this principle until facility of expression and originality of style are acquired. Another French writer, supplementing Lamartine on this point, remarks that this matter of learning how to say things comes as swift, sometimes, as the merging of the first gray light of day into the full rose-glory of completed dawn. Still another Frenchman, a scientist, declared that after he had spent long weary years in trying to master a complex Copyright, 1887, by William obstacle, and had been forced to abandon it in despair, it suddenly flashed upon him, one day, in distinct clearness, when he was pondering an altogether different problem. The writer s knack is apt to come as the lightning comes. It can be sought, earnestly and diligently, in every practicable direction; it can be theorized and struggled for with the most relentless persistence; its cause may be traced in those who have it, and the attempt may be made by the eager tyro to force his own feet into some of the many pathways that other feet have made; but all in vain: nothing, excepting small-pox and a hornet s tail, ever came to any two persons in the same way, and it is a waste of effort for any person to seek literary facility by aid of any circumstances or conditions which have accorded it to others. The devotee to pencraft must plod on and on as best he can, patiently and uncomplainingly, in the wake...
