Excerpt from A Method of Determining the Clean Weights of Individual Fleeces of Wool An almost complete absence of printed literature descriptive of scouring small quantities of wool necessitated the gradual evolution of the method herein described. At first it was decided to scour whole fleeces. A wooden vat was constructed in a manner which simulated the three-bowl scouring machinery used in commercial plants. Baskets made of hardware cloth were constructed to fit tightly inside each of the three bowls so that. After the wool had been scoured the entire mass could be lifted out without losing any of the wool. This method was wholly unsatisfactory. The amount of wool in the volume of scouring solution was so large as to prevent free movement of the stock through the solution, a cardinal principle in scouring wool. Yet had the capacity of the tubs been increased to permit free movement of the stock; the time required to heat the water to the desired temperature would have made progress very slow and the cost of all operations relatively high. Furthermore, it was found that a large fleece, when wet, was so heavy that two men were required to lift it from the tubs.
