Where er I go, men frown on me; I walk like Cain on earth; All shudder when my face they see; Even in the halls of mirth, At sight of me, the voices gay In secret whispers die away. When on some gala day I hear Men cry, God save the king! The very mob, if I come near, Point at the hated thing, Shrink at my vile name s very sound, And empty space straight girds me round. But no ! I must not feel man s wrath; My fate is more forlorn; Each hastes in horror from my path, Or stares in silent scorn; And if a soldier meet my glance, He turns his back as I advance. If to my thoughts for peace I turn, Still peace and I must part; A hungry, never-dying worm Is gnawing at my heart; And conscience self proclaims my ban, Forever whispering, Thou rt the man. When quiet night outspreads her wings, I blush beneath the moon; Refreshing morn no solace brings, Nor...
