The sunset floods the sky with golden light, The fleecy clouds flush crimson at the sight, Swift-veiling darkness marks the close of day, The last sea-rovers wing their lonely way Unto the lodestone of their tireless flight, And silence rules supreme the slumb ring night. AUTUMN. The Woodland, aflame with frosty fire, Yellowed with gold, Mellowed with gold, Tremulous in each leafy spire, Sways to the lay of the breeze-blown lyre; Beaming fire white, Gleaming fire white, As ruddy flush and glow of green Are molten in one dazzling sheen. Stray leaflets dot the winnowing breeze, Flocking to rest, Rocking to rest, Tis the glory of death...
