Like many other countries in Europe, Slovenia suffered severe consequences during and after WWII. Many historians claim that WWII was the continuation of WWI, which had ravaged Slovenia and, in consequence, divided its territories and citizens. Before WWI, Slovenia was part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. In 1915, Italy attacked Austria and opened the Isonzo Front, one of the cruelest series of battles during WWI, ending in the defeat of the Italian army at Kobarid (Caporetto). Hemingway wrote about the battle in Farewell to Arms. Nevertheless, Italy was on the side of the winners, and consequently gained vast territories of Slovenia, Istria, and Dalmatia according to the Treaty of Rapallo. The people under the Italian rule were soon subjected to the genocidal policies of the Italian Fascists that came to power in the 1920s. The novel begins in 1943 in the hinterland of Trieste that has been under Italian rule for more than two decades. The novel tells the story of Ada and Valeria, two friends who come from the same little village in the heart of the Brkini Hills near Trieste. Circumstances soon separate them. Ada marries an affluent psychiatrist who joins the Home Guard, while Valeria becomes a dedicated activist of the Communist-led Liberation Front. After the atrocities of the war, their children are brought up in the new Titoist Yugoslavia. Seventy years later, a brother and a sister must face the story of their unfortunate parents. They are torn apart, only to be joined by love. Cherry trees with their white blossoms and red fruit symbolize the nation, the division between the white Home Guard and the red Communists. Without taking sides, this national epic portrays the...
