Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Annals of Wyoming, Vol. 6: July-October, 1929 Long after we had the fire out and the place well soaked and out of danger of any further damage we left while the remaining four were busily engaged in trying to improve each other s none too prepossessing countenances. We had approached within about 50 feet of our camp when Quantrel, looking backward, called out, Look at that son of a gun with the pitchfork. One fellow was standing over the one who had been knocked out with the bucket of water and was making passes at him with the fork, but when he made a stab at him missed his mark and drove the fork into the ground so deep. That it required some effort to pull it out, and when he did recover it, went over backwards and lost the fork in the creek. Then crawling upon his hands and knees removed the wreck of the bucket from the fellows head and taking it in his lap began moaning and crooning over him. Perceiving that the war was over, we started to return to our camp and were within a few steps of it when the old house fell in with a crash like heaven and earth had come together. The antics of the drunken navvies had kept us from being buried in it. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
