The poet Ted Hughes wrote - The sea cries with its meaningless voice treating alike its dead and its living The starting point for playwright Bev Clark s new drama- When The Dark Sea Cries. Set in the 1850s on the North Somerset coast, the fictitious village of Sealand experiences a tragedy. Eight women between fifteen and seventy wait for their menfolk to return from a treacherous sea. They have launched their fishing boats to help a ship in distress. The storm grows worse and the wives, mothers, sisters and daughters face a night of terrible consequences. Into their harsh existence a travelling doctor arrives, an Irishman living and working in Bristol thrown of his horse and now wandering in the night finds his way to the village. The women befriend him and old Susan the spinster believes his arrival is providence. During the long night Marianne confides a terrible secret to her younger sister Kate. Dr Trelawney and the strong-minded Kate know that something has passed between them but both sisters are married to...
