Excerpt from Commercial Gardening, Vol. 4 of 4: A Practical and Scientific Treatise for Market Gardeners, Market Growers, Fruit, Flower and Vegetable Growers, Nurserymen, Etc Although results are not so quickly attainable with trees and shrubs as in some branches of nursery or market-garden work, yet once stocks are secured and a supply maintained by a properly organized scheme of propagation, there should be no difficulty in finding a market. The development of garden cities and suburbs, the increasing practice of planting trees in streets, and the growing desire shown by owners of gardens and pleasure grounds, small and great, to utilize either flowering or foliage trees and shrubs, are all indications of a demand that has to be met. The scope and extent of Operations by the would-be nurseryman will naturally be largely determined by the amount of land available and its situation. A site in the south of England, or on the coast, for instance, will enable many subjects to be propagated and grown out-of-doors throughout the year, whilst similar plants in a nursery farther north may require a glasshouse for propagating and protection during the winter. On the other hand, stock from northern parts has the reputation of greater hardihood than that grown farther south. The best soil for a tree and shrub nursery is undoubtedly a good deep loam, somewhat inclined to a sandy nature rather than too stiff. Clay should be avoided. If a portion of the land is of a peaty nature, so much the better; it will serve excellently for what are termed American plants. At one time it was considered essential that peat should be present in the soil to grow Rhododendrons with success. This...
