Different forms of lighting have been developed to meet new conditions. Increased business transactions and agencies of transportation, as well as the recreation-seeking public require, more and more, the use of streets at night. Street lighting of such a nature is demanded, therefore, as will afford protection and prove an aid in the detection of crime, and the elimination of accidents and fatalities. Protection is the obligation of the city to its inhabitants. They, as tax payers, demand that such needful service be rendered. An adequate police force is impossible without the assistance of a sufficient street lighting system, and good lighting of streets is of no little value to the public, in the way of self protection. Transforming a thoroughfare so that it becomes a promenade, instead of a highway, eliminates greatly the successful commission of crime and literally lights out the evil.
