Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .into the World War in 1917, the Surgeon General of the United States called the American Educational Council to New York and by hin representatives informed the Council that he had decided to recognize the Council as the authoratative body in Dental Education and asked the Council to make a survey of the colleger and then to classifv them according to the findings of the inspection. The classification to be A, B, and C. The products of the schools in classes A and B would be recognized and the graduates of such institutions would be given a commission in the Army or Navy, while the products of the C class schools would not be recognized and would be compelled to go into the ranks in the draft. This gave the Council the necessary club to enforce its requirements and they immediately proceded to do the work that the Surgeon General asked them to do. As a result of that first survey, seven of the schools that were doing Work that was not acceptable to the standards of the Council, were compelled to either go out of business or to completely reorganize upon the basis of the Council s requirements. The result was immediate and eminently satisfactory for within a very short time after the classifications had been made, the Government of the United States, through its officials in the Army and Navy, recognized the Dental Profession as on a parity with the Medical Profession, with...
