ENTOMOLOGIST S RECORD AND JOURNAL OF VARIATION, VOL. 13: JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1901 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Entomologist s Record and Journal of Variation, Vol. 13: January to December, 1901 It has occurred to us that the end of the nineteenth century was a very fit and proper time to give a brief review of the entomological work that has been done during the past hundred years, and for this purpose we have asked some of our leading working entomologists to contribute a short article on what each considered the more important factors of progress in his own particular line of study. To our request we have had a generous response, and this number is the result. In order to recognise the progress made in entomological science during the century, it is necessary to consider what goes to the making of entomological science, and even a superficial consideration will show that the work comprised falls pretty clearly into the following lines: (1) The alphabet work of describing and naming the material with which one has to deal. (2) The study of the material with a view to its proper genealogical arrangement. (3) The accumulation of facts by experiment and observation. (4) The collection of isolated facts into systematic order and the deduction of sound generalisations relating to the phenomena of life from these facts. The intelligent observer and the capable reasoner are undoubtedly the two factors that make most for the advancement of science; the proper arrangement and classification of the facts observed and the clear setting forth of the conclusions reached, may then be added. There can be no doubt, whatever, that the progress of systematic work will be the feature by which the nineteenth century will be specially known to future generations of naturalists. In 1758 the...
